

I would like to comment regarding the FCC's proposal regarding telephone privacy. Our family signed up for Indiana's Telephone Privacy service when it was first implemented. It has been a great relief and time-saver for our family.

Before the privacy law went into effect, we would receive 2-3 calls most days, usually right when I was helping my kids with their homework (not a good time for distractions), preparing dinner or just sitting down to eat. It had gotten to the point that we would not answer the phone during these times of the day assuming that if someone really needed to talk with us they would leave a message.

We don't receive many phone calls at all anymore. Less than one per month. What a relief. Please do not reduce the efficiency of the system the State of Indiana has implemented. This is an issue that individual states should be able to manage without federal interference.
